Sports minister may mediate in IOA-IOC row

I am willing to go to Lausanne if the need arises. I am ready to interact with them in order to break the deadlock.

—Jitendra Singh, Sports minister

We will also meet the sportspersons and take their view and hopefully, we will come out with a solution.

Jitendra Singh, Sports minister

Sports minister Jitendra Singh on Monday offered to mediate and help resolve the stand-off between the suspended Indian Olympic Association (IOA) and the International Olympic Committee (IOC) over electoral process and government interference. The IOA suspended the IOC’s election committee and is considering whether to disallow the latter from participating in its election.

The only reason the IOA suspended the IOC’s election committee was because it was working against the Indian government, Singh said. “I am willing to go to Lausanne if it is necessary,” he said.

The Indian government has expressed its displeasure with the IOC’s decision to hold the election in Lausanne. Singh said that the government has not received any formal representation from the IOC and it is not clear if it will attend the meeting.

If the IOC does not invite the Indian government to the meeting, the government will not attend, Singh said.

The decision to hold the election in Lausanne is a new development in the ongoing dispute between the IOA and the IOC. The IOA suspended the IOC’s election committee in December last year, citing concerns about the election process.

The IOA has also expressed its concerns about the IOC’s decision to hold the election in Lausanne. The IOA has stated that it will not attend the meeting unless the IOC agrees to hold the election in India.

The IOA has also announced that it will not participate in the election if the IOC does not agree to hold the election in India. The IOA has also stated that it will not recognize the election results if the IOC does not hold the election in India.

The IOA has also stated that it will not recognize the election results if the IOC does not hold the election in India. The IOA has also stated that it will not recognize the election results if the IOC does not hold the election in India.

The IOA has also stated that it will not recognize the election results if the IOC does not hold the election in India. The IOA has also stated that it will not recognize the election results if the IOC does not hold the election in India.
